

Book review on Chinese Cinderella - The Secret story of an Unwanted Daughter By Vanessa Lau

After reading Chinese Cinderella ( The Secret story of an Unwanted Daughter), I realized that in the world there is not only evil and good people, but also some people that can climb back up in the deep hole. Not everyone can do that, that's the most important thing. Adeline Yen Mah had passed her children life as an unwanted daughter, and she had even been a great student while her evil stepmother treated her badly. That really impressed me deeply. The story told us that if you can stay to the last, that's the winner.

Sometimes, life is not as comfortable or as perfect as you think, you might have a car crash tomorrow and die, or your dearest mother might get small disease the day after. You must learn how to survive and remain safe like Adeline Yen Mah.

There is a poem I wrote that I wanted to share with you:

Life is blue,
Unwanted is cruel.
Happy is true,
It just doesn't stay too long.

Life is blue,
Unwanted is cruel,
And also true.
It just stays too long.

Life is blue,
Unwanted is cruel.
Peace will come though the moon,
It will stay with you.

There is another story I wanted to share with you:
It's about, home.

Home

Home is a place you will get peace, and love from your family most.

There is many kinds of home, beautiful ones, old ones, plain ones and new ones. It can be made out from old collapsed iron, or some beautiful and strong things you can see. But it is still a home, no matter where it is, or what it is made out from.

Sometimes it will protect us from harm, but sometimes it will collapse and break. Still, it is our home.

Home also means mother and father to some people, but to some other people, home is not here any more, it is either ruined or collapsed.

Some people don't even have one. But still, I knew that to everyone's heart, home means, home.
